Amazon Studios
Culver City, CA

Dear Amazon Studios Animation Team,

Animation has always been one of the places where storytelling gets to be most fully itself, where the visual and the emotional and the musical can work together without the constraints of live action. I have spent the last several years building the coordination and production skills to support exactly that kind of creative work at scale, and the Creative Coordinator role on Amazon Studios' Animated Original Series team is where I want to bring them.

The core of this role, tracking pitches and deliverables, maintaining submission logs, coordinating across internal departments, building and updating interdepartmental grids, and supporting creative executives, is work I have been doing across every role I have held. At Common Thread Entertainment, I tracked and coordinated 5+ simultaneous project pipelines while conducting market research that fed directly into cross-functional team decisions. At Shades Collective, I coordinated all production logistics for an international documentary podcast, built original content production decks from scratch, and managed stakeholder communications across distributed creative and brand partnership teams simultaneously. At Carnegie Mellon's Arts Management and Technology Laboratory, I managed the full production pipeline for 16 episodes across two documentary-style series from pre-production through multi-platform distribution, including audience analytics that led me to restructure the series format mid-run to improve discoverability. These are not adjacent experiences, they are the exact functions this role asks for in a different context.

My knowledge of the animation industry is genuine but still developing, and I want to name that directly. I have deep knowledge of the entertainment industry broadly through my graduate training and capstone research, strong familiarity with Prime Video's animated content as a viewer, and a real, long-standing interest in how animation uses music and sound to build emotional worlds that live-action rarely can. I do not yet have years of experience inside an animation development department specifically, and the preferred qualifications reflect that. What I can offer is the organizational precision, the cross-functional coordination instinct, and the genuine creative curiosity that this role depends on, alongside a fast track record of ramping up inside new content environments.

I would welcome the opportunity to bring that combination to Amazon Studios' Animated Series team.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,
Jabreneé Hussie
