NFL Films
Mount Laurel, NJ

Dear NFL Films Hiring Team,

I have spent more nights than I can count watching 30 for 30 documentaries, drawn in as much by the choice of a single archival clip or a perfectly placed needle-drop as by the story itself. Those choices are not accidents. They are the result of someone in a role like this one doing the research, securing the rights, and tracking every detail so the storytelling can do its job. I would like to be that person for NFL Films.

At Position Music, I verified metadata across 50 to 60 NBC Sports cue sheet entries per cycle, ensuring accuracy across deliverables for multiple third-party partners, and cataloged over 200 TV, film, trailer, and advertising placements under real deadline pressure. That sports-specific cue sheet work means I am not approaching this role from music licensing alone. I have already done the kind of detail-level, partner-facing accuracy checking that sits at the center of this position, on sports content specifically.

I bring a closely related but distinct kind of clearance experience as well. As music supervisor across 10 episodes of Roots & Revelry, a diaspora documentary podcast filmed on location in Ghana, I coordinated music clearance with international artist teams and managed rights workflows between creative, legal, and budget stakeholders. That gave me firsthand experience with the negotiation and budget constraints that sit underneath every clearance log, from the production side rather than only the catalog side.

My background is not limited to the music side of rights and licensing. My undergraduate degree in Information Technology from Delaware State University, combined with a Master of Entertainment Industry Management from Carnegie Mellon University's Heinz College, gave me both the technical comfort to pick up new systems quickly and the business grounding to understand why a clearance decision matters beyond the immediate deadline. I currently use Airtable, Notion, Asana, Trello, and Monday.com for project and rights tracking, which lines up directly with the systems experience this role calls for.

I understand this role calls for two years of dedicated rights and clearances experience, and my experience comes from internships and project-based roles rather than a single in-house archival department. What that experience does include, directly, is sports-specific cue sheet verification, third-party metadata accuracy, and documentary-side rights coordination, along with a demonstrated ability to ramp up quickly on new systems and processes. I would welcome the chance to bring that combination, and a genuine, long-standing interest in the kind of storytelling NFL Films makes, to your team.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,
Jabreneé Hussie
