Netflix Animation Studios
Burbank, CA

Dear Netflix Animation Studios Music Creative and Production Team,

I still go back and listen to 'I Choose You' by Alessia Cara from The Willoughbys. Not occasionally, but regularly, and every time it does the same thing to me that it did the first time I watched the film. I cry. I don't think I fully understood until that moment how much of what animation makes you feel is actually built in the music, by a team that most people never think about while they're watching. That team is the one I want to support.

My background sits at the intersection of music coordination and production operations, which is exactly where this role lives. At Position Music, I worked directly inside DISCO, building and categorizing playlists aligned with creative briefs and verifying metadata across hundreds of catalog entries, which gave me real working time inside the kind of music database and file-sharing infrastructure this team uses daily. At Shades Collective, I served as music supervisor on a 10-episode podcast produced in tandem with a documentary I was a production assistant on, which was based in Ghana, coordinating music clearance with international artist teams and managing rights workflows across creative, legal, and budget stakeholders, while simultaneously managing the production's schedules, communications, and asset workflows. That combination of music-specific work and high-volume production coordination is not something I arrived at strategically. It's just what my career has naturally looked like.

The production operations side of this role is equally familiar. At Carnegie Mellon's Arts Management and Technology Laboratory, I managed the end-to-end pipeline for 16 episodes of two documentary-style series, coordinating across a distributed team from pre-production through multi-platform delivery, populating agendas, tracking action items, and translating performance data into operational decisions. At Common Thread Entertainment, I tracked 5+ simultaneous workflows and built structured reports for cross-functional decision-making. The calendar management, meeting logistics, documentation, and cross-functional liaison work this role describes are things I have been doing across every role I have held, just without the Netflix animation slate as the context.

I want to be honest about one thing: the 3-year administrative experience requirement is the clearest gap between what I have and what this role asks for. My coordination experience is real and consistent, but it has been built across internships and project-based roles rather than a single long-form admin track. What I can offer instead is a demonstrated ability to operate at a high level across multiple simultaneous production demands, a genuine and deeply personal relationship with what music does inside an animated film, and an authentic desire to be part of the team that makes that happen.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,
Jabreneé Hussie
