Lionsgate
Santa Monica, CA

Dear Lionsgate Theatrical Music Team,

My interest in music supervision started with a question I kept asking myself as a kid watching films: who decided that this song goes here, and how did they know it would land that way? That question led me to a Master of Entertainment Industry Management at Carnegie Mellon, to an internship inside Position Music's sync and licensing operation, and eventually to serving as music supervisor on a documentary podcast where I was the one making those decisions, sourcing music, coordinating clearance, and making sure every choice served the story. I am now looking to bring that foundation into a theatrical music environment, and Lionsgate is exactly where I want to do it.

At Position Music, I worked directly inside DISCO building and categorizing 10-20 playlists against creative briefs, tagged catalog tracks with keywords and genre metadata to enhance sync discovery, and cataloged 200+ TV, film, trailer, and advertising placements across the full licensing lifecycle. Reading a brief and finding music that answers it specifically is something I practiced regularly, under real deadline pressure. I also verified metadata across 50-60 NBC Sports cue sheet entries per cycle, which built the kind of accuracy and attention to detail that cue sheet organization and music file cataloging require.

The music supervision work I did on Roots & Revelry gave me a different kind of experience, which is what it feels like to be the person responsible for the music decisions rather than just supporting them. Across 10 episodes of a podcast produced alongside a documentary based in Ghana, I sourced and researched music from international artists, coordinated clearance directly with rights holders, and made judgment calls about tone, cultural resonance, and budget compatibility simultaneously. That experience sits alongside my formal coursework in music licensing, intellectual property, and TV business and legal affairs, which gave me the vocabulary and framework to understand why those decisions matter downstream.

Script breakdown for music is something I have done in my Music Supervision coursework at Carnegie Mellon, working through the process of reading a script and identifying where music should enter, what it should do emotionally, and how it interacts with dialogue and scene structure. What I have not yet done is that work in a professional theatrical context. The foundation is there, and I am confident the transition from academic to professional script breakdown is a short one inside an environment where I can learn from an experienced SVP. I am genuinely eager to make that step.

Thank you for your time and consideration. I would welcome the opportunity to speak with your team about how my background might serve Lionsgate's music operation.

Sincerely,
Jabreneé Hussie
